ActionContext

Cameroon has applied a de facto moratorium on executions; no executions have been carried out since 1997. However, death penalty is still applied: 24 crimes are punishable by death in Cameroonian law. Since the numerous death sentences to death pronounced in 2015 (91 persons) and in 2016 (more than 160 persons), no death sentences have been reported. According to the Cameroonian Network of Lawyers Against the Death Penalty (RACOPEM), more than 330 prisoners were under capital punishment in 2018, including more than a hundred for acts of terrorism. After the adoption of the 2014 anti-terrorism law, the scope of application of the death penalty has been extended to non-violent acts as financing of terrorist acts, laundering of proceeds as well as recruitment and training of person to ensure that they participate to terrorist acts. This new legislation is very concerning because it confirmed military court jurisdiction over civilians accused of terrorism. Moreover, the vague definition of terrorism hold out the threat of death on Boko Haram members but also on English-speaking separatists, journalists and opposition members. Conditions of detention and trials are alarming: 78% of death row prisoners interviewed during the fact-finding mission conducted by ECPM and Droits & Paix alleged having been threatened or having been subjected to torture. Though Cameroon observed a moratorium on executions, it has abstained to vote of the United Nations Resolution calling for a universal moratorium on the use of the death penalty. Cameroon ratified the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights in 1984. It has not ratified the Second Optional Protocol on the abolition of the death penalty.

Action

Members of civil society in target countries, whether or not they are stakeholders within abolitionist networks, especially those based outside the capitals, often find it difficult to finance awareness-raising activities on the subject of the death penalty. ECPM and Droits & Paix will implement funding for third parties to support the work of civil society outside the capital, so that they can implement effective advocacy for the project's goals, targeting the emergence of new actors and boosting national movements in support of abolition.

Localisation

Outside Yaounde, Cameroon

Duration

3 to 12 months maximum

The action may include one or more activities. Ongoing projects on October 2021 will have to include an activity for the World Day against the death penalty. Depending on the evolution of the covid-19 context, the activities planned in the project as well as the budget may be revised. Priority will be given to actions leading to capitalisation which can be distributed within a regional framework.
